Capital is the Lifeline of any business – Especially for SMEs

For years, Indian SMEs have relied mostly on bank loans to fund their growth. While useful, bank debt comes with its own challenges:

- Fixed Interest costs
- Need for collateral (like land, building, or machinery)
- Steady business cash flow required for repayments
- Promoters have to invest their own equity too for bank financing

On the other hand, raising equity capital (from venture capitalists, private equity funds, or via IPOs) has traditionally been available only to large, fast-growing, tech companies or mature businesses with strong corporate governance.

To bridge this gap for traditional Indian SMEs - especially those in manufacturing, services, or distribution - a new path was opened up in 2012: the SME IPO.

Since then, more and more SMEs have used this route to raise growth capital without taking on debt. As of August 2025, Indian SMEs have collectively raised over ₹30,000 crore through SME IPOs. Moreover, the Fundraising momentum has significantly accelerated since 2021 and reaching new heights.

This remarkable journey shows how SME IPOs have moved from a niche option to a mainstream growth driver, opening new possibilities not just for big corporates but also a real viable option for growing SMEs reflecting growing maturity, stronger investor trust, and wider access to capital for deserving businesses.

Indian SMEs are turning towards IPOs as strategic tool for sustainable expansion, business transformation, and unlocking hidden value for SME owners and stakeholders while raising long-term capital, building lasting market credibility and attracting long-term investors
